Wipes Market

Disposable and Non Disposable wipes Woven and Non-Woven Wipes

US$ 19.6 Billion Nonwoven wipes world market by 2021

The global nonwoven wipes market is valued at $14.8 billion and will consume 1.1 million tonnes of nonwovens in 2016. By 2021, value is forecast to grow to $19.6 billion and nonwoven consumption to grow to 1.4 million tonnes.

The sale of nonwoven wipes is driven by cost, convenience, hygiene, performance, ease of use, time savings, disposability, safety/regulation and consumer perceived aesthetics (i.e. softness or bulkiness in baby wipes). Industrial wipes have different drivers. Safety and health advantages are major drivers for industrial wipes used in medical or food service (for example, disposable nonwoven wipes lower the risk of contamination versus re-usable laundered textiles).

Baby wipes continue to slow in growth, firstly because they are the most mature market segment in consumer wipes, and secondly, because of increased specialisation in wipes.

Personal care wipes are projected to be the fastest growing consumer segment in this industry. The recent massive addition of flushable nonwoven production capacity will add growth in flushable wipes globally as supply grows and prices drop.

GROWTH DRIVERS

The vast rise in demands for cleaning and disinfecting wipes across hospitals, household applications, manufacturing industry, and commercial spaces as wipes save time and mitigate the need for water are some of the key factors expected to drive the global wipes market in the next few years. Uptake of wipes is also massively driven by their features such as hygiene, performance, convenience, cost, and disposability. While these factors hold true for consumers across the globe and should reflect as proportionate share of key regional markets in global revenue, the reality shows a different picture.
